Any old timer or travel brochure will tell you that if you're visiting Sindelfingen, you do not leave without seeing St. Martin's Church. Seeing is not quite what you do, for here you're confronted with tangible history dating back to the 11th century. You'll be forgiven for giving into the exclamations of awe that escape your open mouth, as you admire the stately pillars and the gothic sacristy among a host of other interesting features.

If you feel the need to know all about this town, get ready to tour the various museums such as the Municipal Museum, Donauschwaben Museum, and the Museum of Weaving. For some contemporary history, stroll over to the Museum of IBM Data Processing, a virtual geek's paradise!

When you've been around and need to relax, a colorful park would be the right place to be in. Just sit yourself down at a strategic park bench on the Sommerhofen Park, and watch the world go by. The Kolstersee Lake will give you the right amount of chit chat to keep that smile on your face. Take a ride on the steam railway for a tour of this picturesque park.

Things perk up a bit in the Old Quarter, now and then, with a fair or a sale that suddenly takes shape and goes full swing. It could be anything from a handicraft sale, the potter's market, the gourmet market or even an international street festival; the common criteria being fun on a major scale.
